1. Act Social

2. Hit and Run

3. Pace of Play and Calling the Clock

4. Exposing your hand to a neighbor

5. Angle Shooting

- Hiding Chips - Hiding some chips behind others to intentionally misrepresent the size of your stack is a form of angle shooting. Make sure all players at the table can reasonably deduce how many chips you have, and avoid mixing chip sizing or hiding larger chip amounts behind other stacks.
- Feigning a Call - A player can pretend to call an opponent's bet either verbally or through gestures/actions. This is angle shooting, since you're trying to gain information without actually calling.
- Fake Folding - Another example of an angle shoot is fake folding. If a player is facing a big river bet, they might pretend to fold by feigning the mucking of their cards, again in order to gauge their opponent's reaction.
- Acting Out of Turn – Deliberately acting before it's your turn to influence others' decisions is a classic angle shoot. It's less common, as it's more obvious that it is a form of angling, but it does still happen. For example, pretending to fold early with a strong hand to encourage another player to call is unethical and against poker etiquette.

6. Slowrolling/Nitrolling

7. One player to a hand/Discussing action

8. Constantly walking away from the table when shorthanded

9. Asking players what they folded complaining about what they folded

10. Berating other players; abusing the dealers/floor

Villain in the hand literally broke this out on the river

- Do we beat value
- Did we give villain rope?
- Is villain capable?
- Can villain have non SDV?
- Is the size significant?
- What price are we getting?
